

Jerome Graham

Jerome Graham graduated from J.H. Rose High School in Greenville, NC in June 1989; as the youngest of six siblings he felt a need to stay close to his aging parents. Opting to forgo college, Jerome sought employment through a local job placement agency and accepted a position at a local doctor's office as a Laboratory Technician. Having discovered a genuine love of Opticianry over six years, he registered as an apprentice, completed an internship, and became a Licensed Dispensing Optician in September 2004.

For a short time Jerome opened I-Optics in Greenville, an after-hours optical exclusively offering eyewear consultations by appointment only. Currently, he works for an independent optical clinic in Tarboro.

Having served the needs of numerous patients and experienced the trust patients place in their eye care provider, Jerome was appointed to the Board by Governor McCrory in July 2016; his term expires in 2019.
